Where the Dear Antelope Play, a comedy in three acts, by John William Rogers. 4 men, 7 women. Royalty, $15. Angelique Mather returns from school with the desire to do over her conservative Texas home. She brings a fashionable decorator who meets much opposition from other members of the family. Father has invited the wife of a business acquaintance to stay at the house while she organizes a Society for the Fruitful Use of Leisure. The play is a wholesome comedy, but it will appeal more to community than to high school groups.—Roberta Dinwiddie Sheets.

The Corn Is Green, a comedy in three acts, by Emyln Williams. 10 m., 5 w., extras. Int. Royalty on application. As all will know who have seen this play with Ethel Barrymore on the stage or Bette Davis on the screen, this is a comedy only in the strict sense that justice is done and the human heart triumphs over selfishness and passion. The story is of a teacher in a Welsh mining town who gives to the world a man who has the capacity for greatness, molding him from the unpromising material of an illiterate miner addicted to drink, and who finds an adequate reward in her final abnegation. The role of Miss Moffat, the teacher, is one of the finest in the modern theatre. The play requires actors of mature abilities, and would therefore be available to few high schools. It is highly recommended as a project for experienced groups.—Blandford Jennings.

The Hasty Heart, a comedy-drama in three acts, by John Patrick. 8 m., 1 w. Interior. A play about seven wounded soldiers in a temporary British General Hospital in a jungle setting. The action revolves around a dour Scotsman who (though he does not learn it until the play's climax) has only a few weeks to live. It is the story of how his defensive reserve and self-sufficiency are broken down by the humanity of his comrades and their nurse, until he learns what love is in time to face the end without distrust of "the hasty heart." The play is deeply moving, relieved, however, with many moments of unforced comedy. The leading character would have to be assigned to a strong actor able to project a convincing characterization of a Scotsman with an authentic accent. Apart from this, the play has no extreme difficulties, and might be done by strong high school groups as well as by more mature organizations.—Blandford Jennings.

Huer Publishing Company, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Nowhere Fast, a mystery comedy in 3 acts, by Van Wallen. Royalty, $10. 4 m., 4 w. One simple setting. Staged at the "Nowhere" Auto Tourist Camp, this play centers about the attempts of a successful detective novelist, Rita Adams, to solve a bank robbery. It seems she gets "nowhere fast," however, due to the strange antics of everyone at Nowhere including Bradford Smythe and Frank Robins. One wears a false beard and the other claims to be lost. All ends well, however, when the sheriff announces the capture of the thieves and an explanation is given for the mysterious actions of the guests at Nowhere. A light, easy-to-do play.—Elmer S. Crowley.

A Handbook of Simplified Play Directions, by Robert St. Clair, A Handbook of Do's and Don'ts for Actors and Directors, by William Fisher, Practical Suggestions on Makeup for Actors and Directors, by William Fisher. For those teachers who all of a sudden have been told that it is their obligation to direct the junior or senior play and they have had no formal training in directing, these pamphlets would go a long way in reviving their spirits. In short, concise, simplified statements the authors have stated the basic requirements of such improvised directing and make-up.—Robert W. Ensley.
